LARGE SAVING IN REPAVING

Borough Profits by Repaving of Bigler Avenue

$1335.25 UNDER LOW BID

With Material Enough Left to Complete Concrete Sidewalk Along Borough Property on the Avenue—Council Pleased With The Showing—Routine Business.

Roll call of the borough council Monday evening found the president absent and Fred Kerr was chosen to preside at the meeting. The clerk was also absent hunting and John M. Urey, Esq., borough solicitor, acted as clerk.

Routine business was transacted. The street commissioner was directed to do such work on sidewalks as might be necessary before winter sets in.

The ordinance granting permission to the Dimeling Light and Heat company to operate in the borough was repealed, the company having transferred its plant to the Penn Public Service company.

Bigler Avenue Paving. Street Commissioner Graham reported the completion of the Bigler avenue repaving. The total cost of this work, including the labor, material and engineer's services amounted to $3146.71. The lowest bid for this work was $5082. In this bid a pitch filling was provided for, but the council decided to let the brick remain rough, because of the fact that the steepness of the street would make the paving too smooth for horses if pitch were put on the brick. By taking this course the borough saved $600.

Saved $1335.25. The saving to the borough in doing this repaving itself was shown to be $1335.25.

The borough bought all material and has on hand crushed stone and cement enough to complete the six foot concrete sidewalk along the borough's property on Bigler avenue. Members of council were very much pleased over the report, and the large saving on this job is likely to convince councilmen in the future that the borough can do its own paving at a saving that will be well worth considering.

Improving on Nature. Far be it from a mere parent to criticize nature, but had she in her beneficence seen fit to equip the small boy with boots, what a saving had been made in the matter of shoes!—Chicago News

The Alternative. A Frenchman applied to a local official for a passport to visit Klatterwischen, in Switzerland. The functionary, who was not a fellow of any geographical society, studied in vain with the spelling of the place's name. Then, unwilling to confess his difficulty, he blandly asked, "Would you as not visit some other town?"

DEATHS OF A DAY.

William Cowie, formerly mayor and postmaster of Syracuse, died in that city.

Mary L. St. John, aged ninety-one, widow of Burr St. John, New Jersey merchant, died at Brooklyn.

Harriet E. Burke, widow of William Lockwood Burke, Brooklyn banker, died in Westbury, R. I.

Samuel H. Kaercher, a leading member of the bar, died at his home in Pottsville, Pa., from paralysis.

Baron Bonda, speaker of the second chamber of the Swedish parliament, died in Stockholm on being informed of the sudden death of his wife.

Colonel Telemachus E. d'Apéry, for forty years an officer in the Turkish army, civil engineer in chief for the sultan and later treasurer of the empire, died in Philadelphia, aged eighty-eight years. His wife, now dead, was Miss Olive Harper, the author.

Mrs. Charlotte Campbell, oldest woman in southern New Jersey, died in Vineland, aged 104 years. She never had been out of the state. Once she caught a bear up a tree and, taking off her white skirt, tied the garment around the tree and held the bear a prisoner until she could summon her husband with a gun.

Everybody will buy a Government Rubber Blanket, Friday and Saturday of this week only, at Monarch Billiard Parlor. Next door to Leitzinger Bros. Nov. 19-21.

For Rent. House on West Market Street. Possession can be given at once. John L. Gifford.

DONATION DAY

Public Asked to Contribute to Clearfield Hospital.

The attention of the public is called to the seventh annual Donation of the Clearfield hospital. Thursday, Friday and Saturday, November 20, 21, and 22, and Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 24, 25 and 26, have been fixed as Donation Days.

Notice is particularly given of the apple and potato contributions from the schools of the borough and teachers are asked to especially emphasize to their pupils the importance of this donation.

The different places of business have kindly offered to deliver to the hospital all goods purchased from them.

MRS. FRANK FIELDING,
President Woman's Auxiliary.
MRS. BLANCHE BIDDLE,
Treasurer.

FUNERAL OF FRANK E. REILLEY

Well-Known Clearfield Citizen Laid in the Grave.

The funeral of Frank Elmer Reilley was held this morning from the St. Francis Catholic church. Rev. Father Ryan officiated and interment was made in St. Francis cemetery.

Mr. Reilley died on Saturday. He was ill for several months. He was the son of Thomas and Sarah Reilley and is survived by the following sisters and brothers: Mrs. Mary Reilley, Ridgway; Mrs. J. G. Lytle, Clearfield; Sister Antoinette, Blairsville; Harry, Sheridan, Thomas and Bertha, at home.

WILL BE PAROLED

Two Clearfield County Prisoners to be Given Liberty.

The following prisoners sent to the Western penitentiary by the Clearfield county court have been recommended for parole, under the provisions of the new law:

Miles McIntosh, sentenced one to two years for larceny.
Dominico Marbito, sentenced one to two years for aggravated assault.
Harry Koughner, sentenced one to two years for larceny, was refused parole.

WITTPENN IS NAMED N. Y. NAVAL OFFICER

Wilson Selects Jerseyman For New York Office.

Washington, Nov. 18.—President Wilson nominated ex-Mayor H. Otto Witt penn of Jersey City to be naval officer of customs for the port of New York. In sending the nomination to the senate the president departed from his usual custom and issued a statement explaining the appointment.

The office to which Mr. Witt penn is appointed has heretofore been considered an exclusive bit of patronage for Brooklyn. In going to New Jersey for his candidate the president made the following explanation:

"The appointment of a resident of New Jersey to this position is made in recognition of that part of New Jersey which was included in the customs collection district of New York under the reorganization of the customs service which took effect on July 1, 1913, embracing the counties of Sussex, Passaic, Hudson, Bergen, Essex, Union, Middlesex and Monmouth, and it is entirely appropriate that New Jersey should be represented in one of the important administrative offices of the consolidated port."

Mr. Witt penn called at the White House with Senator Hughes of New Jersey.

NEW THAW WRIT FILED.

Hearing at Once in Federal Court on Amended Petition.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 18.—The amended petition for a writ of habeas corpus, which acts as a stay in the removal of Harry K. Thaw from New Hampshire to New York, was filed by Thaw's attorneys here. Amendments to the original petition were necessitated by the indictment in New York county charging conspiracy to escape from the Matteawan asylum.

A hearing on the amended petition of Thaw and also upon the petition of the state of New York for the dismissal of the habeas corpus proceedings will be given in the federal court here.

Lake Derelict Goes Down. Port Huron, Mich., Nov. 18.—The overturned freighter Charles E. Price, a derelict for more than a week, sank in Lake Huron. The report was received here by wireless.

FRIENDS MEET AT GRAMPIAN

Interesting Sessions of the Quarterly Meeting

DISCUSSIONS OF INTEREST

Address of Woman Suffrage by Miss Hall—Dr. Bacheller Talks of Peace and Other Matters—Religious Exercises—Friends Emphasize Their Desire for Peace.

The Society of Friends opened their quarterly meeting at Grampian with the First Day School association on Saturday, November 15, at 2 P. M. The exercises consisted of music, including a duet by Elbel and Vera Spencer; recitations by Corlies Rishel and Eva Thorp and an essay by Roy Caldwell.

The question, "The Importance of an Education in a Religious Life," was discussed by C. M. Davis, J. D. Wall, Arthur Dewees, C. A. Wood, and others. The thought was brought out that our every-day life should be a religious life, in fact that if we lead a truly religious life it should be a part of our every-day business life, and that education—that is, development—of the proper kind would help to make us able to live such a life.

Saturday Evening.

Saturday evening's meeting was held under the auspices of the Friends Philanthropic Labor union with George W. Underwood, chairman. The meeting was addressed by Miss Louise Hall, Harrisburg, representing the Woman's Suffrage association of Pennsylvania. Miss Hall illustrated her lecture with a map of the United States, showing the spread of equal suffrage from its beginning in Wyoming in 1869 to Illinois in 1913, showing how adjacent states, seeing its working, adopted it one after another until now millions of women, especially in the west, are placed on a voting equality with men.

Much satisfaction was expressed with the address, a good collection for the cause was secured and quite a number enrolled as favoring woman suffrage.

Sabbath Morning.

Sabbath morning's meeting for worship was largely attended, as usual, in spite of the rain and bad roads. The meeting was addressed by Daniel Bacheller, of Philadelphia, who spoke of better, easier living from the point of view of doing our daily duties and work as a service. That which is done as a task is drudgery; that which is done out of love of service, is a pleasure.

So the point of view with which we approach our labors has much to do with their ease or irksome performance, and in whatever we do we can feel that we are performing service; that we are assisting in God's work; we feel an inspiration that will make our life a truly religious life.

Ann Moore, a friend almost 80 years old, said she could willingly do any necessary service, no matter how menial, but she wouldn't want to clean spittoons. (Many friends oppose the use of tobacco.)

Sabbath Afternoon.

The afternoon meeting in the interest of Friends Philanthropic Labor union was addressed by Daniel Bacheller on "International Peace." He said that when two boys met, often had to try each other's strength to see which one could overcome the other in wrestling or even fighting, which was perfectly right and proper and in the line of development of their powers as children. They should outgrow that, but it should not be allowed to become a habit, lasting on into manhood.

In the community under our present civilization we have learned to settle our disputes in an orderly manner and without fighting, but nations try to settle their disputes after the manner pursued by man hundreds or thousands of years ago—by bloodshed.

The early history of Christianity was detailed, the persecution of the early Christians by the Romans, which served only to increase their numbers and make them the more faithful to the teachings of Christ. The speaker said there were many signs to show that we are coming back to the law of love.

Friends for Peace.

The Friends have always held to the practice of peace and good will and the settlement of disputes by arbitration or mutual concessions, and other religious bodies are, for one reason or another, coming to stand on the same ground. The workingmen and farmers being the greatest sufferers (next to mothers) are coming to oppose war.

The Business Meeting.

The business meeting Monday morning was preceded by a half hour of discussion of "The Larger Vision" as introduced by Arthur M. Dewees, of Baltimore, general secretary of the committee for advancing Friends principles, who, taking as his text a quotation from the autobiography of a noted woman worker said that the inspiration caused, perhaps, by our suddenly becoming capable of appreciating some new beauty or wonder of nature or art made us capable of other enlarged visions and tended to broaden our views of life and its work and duties.

The reading of queries in regard to the attitude of each toward the other and society in general elicited much thought and valuable discussion as did also the changes in discipline as reported as having been made by the late yearly meeting held at Baltimore.

Reports Received.

Reports were received from the four monthly meetings constituting this quarterly meeting, and delegates were present from meetings in Center and Bedford counties.

At the close of the meeting the general feeling was that a very pleasant and profitable series of meetings had been held, and much encouragement could be felt for the progress humanity is making toward better, saner, more civilized and enlightened ways of living.

HUERTA CONTINUES DEFIANT ATTITUDE

Expects No Difficulty in Organizing New Congress.

Mexico City, Nov. 18.—General Huerta regards his part in the recent change of communications with the United States as finished. He expects to find no difficulty in consummating his plan to bring his new congress to full organization, and he continues making plans for military campaigns and for carrying out his policies of pacification.

What further move may be taken at Washington is a question which neither the Mexicans nor the foreigners here find an easy one to answer, but there was noticeable an increasing expression of opinion that the United States would continue the hands off policy. This was not a predominating belief, but those who expressed it pointed out that there was an element at Washington which would be content to see the federal and Constitutionalists play their own game to the finish, the taking of Juarez by the Constitutionalists being cited as perhaps an encouragement of such a disposition at Washington.

It was reported unofficially that the city of Chihuahua had been captured. The war department, however, has little information regarding the military operations, especially those in the north, in which the rebels are said to be victorious.

The situation about Tuxpan, the center of the oil industry, is critical.

ARRESTED AT WHITE HOUSE.

Man Found in Shrubbery Will Be Examined in Asylum Hospital.

Washington, Nov. 18.—A man who gave his name as Clyde Wyther was found in the shrubbery south of the White House and was arrested by the police.

He could give no explanation for his presence so close to the executive mansion and was imprisoned. He will be remanded to the asylum hospital for examination as to his sanity.

PENROSEISM THE LEADING ISSUE

Should Not be Returned to
United State Senate

PROGRESSIVES WILL FIGHT

Party of the People Will Put Forth Every Effort to Defeat the So-called Gifford Pinchot Delivers a Ringing Speech at Progressive Gathering at Scranton.

Scranton, Nov. 16. Progressives of thirteen northeastern counties, who met here today at a dinner given at the home of the Scranton Daily News, the new Progressive paper, formed a league, one of the main objects of which is to fight Penrose and Penroseism to a finish.

Fifty-six Progressives of state and national prominence attended the dinner also including Gifford Pinchot; William Wilhelm, of Pottsville, president of the State Progressive league; A. Nevil Delrich, of Chambersburg, chairman of the Washington party state committee, and Congressman A. F. Rupley, of Carlisle.

Progressives Steady as Veterans. In his speech Mr. Pinchot said: "A veteran regiment is best for one reason above all others—because it is steady. The veteran regiment was because you cannot scare it, you cannot fool it, you cannot stampede it, and you cannot make it quit. Those are the reasons why the Progressive movement is so formidable in American politics today. Not all of us have been in politics for a long time, but confidence in our cause, and the certainty of victory for our principles, has given us the steadiness, the persistence and the power of veterans."

Progressives Gain. "We showed this steadiness at the Chicago Republican convention. We showed it when we came back to the Chicago Progressive convention; we showed it during the presidential election, and most of all, after it; and we have shown it again this year."

"In the elections this fall, Massachusetts was the one state where the lines were sharply drawn between Progressives, Democrats and Republicans. And in that state the vote for governor showed that the Progressives gained 3 per cent. over the vote in 1912, the Republicans lost 19 per cent and the Democrats lost 6 per cent."

Represents Magnate Rule.

"Why is the first great task before us in Pennsylvania to drive Penrose out of the seat in the United States senate which he disgraces and to relieve the seat of the blight upon its honor which he represents? Not because Penrose himself matters one way or the other. Standing alone, he would never have got where he is. But Penrose is important because he stands for an end and is supported by the magnates, who exercise through him the control over the state of Pennsylvania which has made them and keeps them over-rich."

Wipe Him Out.

"Penrose is the outward and visible sign in Pennsylvania of the magnate blight from which the whole nation is suffering. We must wipe him out and we shall wipe him out; but if after a time we allow another like him to take his place, little will have been gained."

"This is not a case of halfway measures. We have set out to make this state and nation, in fact as well as in theory, a land where every man has an equal chance. The magnate system must go. Our task will never be done until we have driven not only Penrose, but the exploiters behind him out of power for good and all."

Waifs Who Became Famous.

The list of waifs who have become famous is a long one. It includes Sir Henry Stanley, Queen Catherine the Good, Alexander Hamilton, Rosa Bonheur, Edgar Allan Poe, Rachel, Leonardo da Vinci and dates back as far as Moses. All these were homeless children—children who if left to their fate would undoubtedly have drifted into evil ways. Instead they have lived to add glory to their names and have contributed to the knowledge of the world at large through the fruits of their genius.

SADDENED BY SLUMS, GIRL TRIES TO DIE

Conditions Among Poor of New York Caused Despondency.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 18.—We hope was held here by the physicians of the Homeopathic hospital for saving the life of Miss Virginia Sterling, twenty-five years old, who came here from New York, but who is believed to be a member of a wealthy Virginia family. The girl took bichloride of mercury tablets. Melancholia brought on by the misery and suffering she witnessed while working in the slums of New York and in the charity hospitals is believed to have been the reason for taking the poison.

The young woman will say very little about herself further than that she lived for a time in both the Manhattan and the Victoria hotels in Manhattan.

Before the young woman lost consciousness she said that she had nothing to live for and begged the physicians at the hospital to do nothing to try to prolong her life. She has refused to tell the address of any of her relatives either in New York or Virginia. When found unconscious in Main street in this city she was garbed in an expensive suit of wine colored broadcloth trimmed with fur. On her hands were two solitary diamond rings, as well as a wedding ring.

Handel's Big Earnings.

Handel made more money from his works than any composer before his time. For a "Te Deum" and a "Jubilate," written to celebrate the treaty of Utrecht, he was awarded a pension of £200 a year. This was doubled by George I. soon after his accession and confirmed by George II., so that Handel drew the pension until his death in 1759. Altogether for these two compositions Handel received £18,000. Although he lost thousands of pounds running opera at Covent Garden, Handel died worth £20,000—a sum, allowing for the difference in the value of money, equal to $50,000 nowadays.—London Mail.

A Mechanical Craving.
That mechanical craving which Macmillan got over is a common one. My own father—with a twist toward homes—used to walk about with a bit of straw in his mouth. I have traveled across the Atlantic with a man who could not get along without a "cold cigar," and the one I met him from Liverpool to New York. And these notes are written by a smoker with a cold pipe in his mouth. I want a pipe, but the tobacco in it amounts to about a quarter of an ounce a week.—London Chronicle.

WITHIN THE LAW

By MARVIN DANA

BAYARD VEILLER

against the law that had outraged her, and this in safety since she would attempt nought save that within the law.

CHAPTER V. Keeping Within the Law.

MARY'S heart leaped at the possibility back of those three words, "within the law." She might do anything, seek any revenge, work any evil, enjoy any mastery as long as she should keep within the law. There could be no punishment then. That was the lesson taught by the captain in high finance. He was at pains always in his stuporous robberies to keep within the law. To that end he employed lawyers of mighty cunning and learning to guide his steps aright in such tortuous paths.

There, then, was the secret. Why should she not use the like means? Why, indeed? She had brains enough to devise, surely. Beyond that she needed only to keep her course most carefully within those limits of wrongdoing permitted by the statutes. The sole requirement would be a lawyer equally unscrupulous and astute.

She took Joe Garson into her confidence. He was vastly astonished at the outset and not quite pleased. To his view this plan offered merely a fashion of setting difficulties in the way of achievement.

Presently, however, the sincerity and persistence of the girl won him over. The task of convincing him would have been easier had he himself ever known the torment of serving a term in prison. Thus far, however, the former had always escaped the penalty for his crimes, though often close to conviction. But Mary's arguments were of a compelling sort as she set them forth in detail, and Garson agreed that the experiment should be made.

An agreement was made by which Joe Garson and certain of his more trusted intimates in the underworld were to put themselves under the orders of Mary concerning the sphere of their activities. Furthermore, they bound themselves not to engage in any devious business without her consent. Aggie, too, was one of the company thus constituted, but she figured little in the preliminary discussions, since neither Mary nor the former had much respect for the intellectual capabilities of the adventures, though they appreciated to the full her remarkable powers of influencing men to her will.

It was not difficult to find a lawyer suited to the necessities of the undertaking. Mary selected Sigismund Harris, an attorney, just in the prime of his mental vigor, who possessed a knowledge of the law only to be equaled by his disrespect for it.

Forthwith the scheme was set in operation. As a first step Mary Turner

hership with the advertiser. By the terms of their agreement each deposited $30,000 to the partnership account. This sum of $60,000 was ostensibly to be devoted to the purchase of a tract of land, which should afterward be divided into lots and resold to the public at enormous profit. As a matter of fact, the advertiser planned to make a spurious purchase of the tract in question by means of forged deeds granted by an accomplice, thus making through fraud a nest profit of $30,000.

No sooner was the $60,000 on deposit in the bank than Mary Turner drew out the whole amount, as she had a perfect right to do legally. When the advertiser learned of this he was, naturally enough, full of overflying wrath. But after an interview with Harris he swallowed his wrath as best he might. He found he could not go to court with clean hands, which is a prime stipulation of the law, though often honored in the breach. So he let himself be mulcted in raging silence.

The event established Mary as the arbiter in her own coterie. She next decided that a certain General Hastings would make an excellent sacrifice on the altar of justice—and to her own financial profit. The old man was a notorious rascal, of most unsavory reputation as a destroyer of innocence. It was probable that he would easily fall a victim to the ingenious charms of Aggie. As for that precocious damsel, she would run no least risk of destruction by the satyr.

General Hastings met Aggie in the most casual way. He was captivated by her freshness and beauty, her demureness, her ignorance of all things vicious. Straightway he set snares. He showered every gallant attention on the naive, bread and butter miss and succeeded gratifyingly soon in winning her heart—to all appearance. But he gained nothing more, for the coy creature abruptly developed most effective powers of resistance to every blandishment that went beyond strict propriety. His ardor cooled suddenly when Harris served a summons in a suit for $10,000 damages for breach of promise.

Even while this affair was still in the course of execution Mary found herself engaged in a direction that offered at least the hope of attaining her great desire—revenge against Edward Gilder. This opportunity came in the person of his son, Dick. After much contriving, she got an introduction to that young man. Forthwith she showed herself so deliciously womanly, so singularly beautiful that the young man was enraptured almost at once. The fact thrilled Mary to the depths of her heart for in this son of the man whom she hated she saw the instrument of vengeance for which she had so longed. Yet this one thing was so vital to her that she said nothing of her purposes, not even to Aggie, though that observant person may have possessed suspicious more or less near the truth.

It was some such suspicion that lay behind her speech as, in negligence, she sat smoking a cigarette, while watching Mary, who was adjusting her hat before the mirror of her dressing table one pleasant spring morning.

"Hullo! up a whole lot, ain't you?" Aggie remarked affably, with that laxity of language which characterized her natural mood.

"I have a very important engagement with Dick Gilder," Mary replied tranquilly.

"Nice boy, ain't he?" Aggie ventured indistinctly.

"Oh, I suppose so," came the indifferent answer from Mary as she tilted the picture hat to an angle a trifle more jaunty.

"I don't get you, Mary. You never used to look at the men. The way you acted when you first run round with me, I thought you sure was a snuff-fragette. And then you met this young Gilder—and—good night, nurse!"

"Well?"

"His old man sends you up for a stretch for something you didn't do, and you take up with his son like—"

"And yet you don't understand!" There was scorn for such gross stupidity in the musical voice.

Aggie choked a little from the cigarette smoke as she gave a gasp when suspicion of the truth suddenly dawned on her slow intelligence.

"Hully gee!" Her voice came in a treble shriek of apprehension. "I'm wise!"

"But you must understand this," Mary went on with an authoritative note in her voice. "Whatever may be between young Gilder and me is to be strictly my own affair. It has absolutely nothing to do with the rest of you or with our schemes for money making. And, what is more, Agnes, I want to know what you meant by talking in the public street yesterday with a common pickpocket."

Aggie's childlike face changed swiftly to an expression of a sly eagerness to sullenness.

"You know perfectly well, Mary Turner," she cried indignantly, "that I only said a few words in passing to my brother Jim. And he ain't no common pickpocket. Hully gee! He's the best dip in the business."

"But you must not be seen speaking with him," Mary directed, with a certain air of command now become habitual to her among the members of her clique. "My cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch, must be very careful as to her associates."

"He just stopped me to say it's been the best year he ever had," she explained, with ostentatious vanity.

"How can that be when the dead line now is John street?"

"The dead line?" Aggie scoffed.

"Why, Jim takes lunch every day in the Wall street Delmonico's. And only yesterday he went down to police headquarters just for a little excitement, 'cause Jim does sure hate a dull life. Say, he told me they've got a mat at the door with 'Welcome' on it in letters three feet high. Now, what do you think of that? And, oh, yes!" she continued happily, "Jim, he lifted a leather from a bull who was standing in the hallway there at headquarters! Jim sure does love excitement."

Mary lifted her dark eyebrows in half amused inquiry.

"It's no use, Agnes," she declared, though without entire sincerity. "I can't quite keep up with your thieves' argot—your slang, you know. Just what did this brother of your do?"

"Why, he copped the copper's kaie," Aggie translated, glibly.

Mary threw out her hands in a gesture of dismay.

Thereupon the adventures instantly assumed a most ladylike and mining air which ill assorted with the cigarette that she held between her lips.

"He gently removed a leathern wallet," she said sedately, "containing a large sum of money from the coat pocket of a member of the detective force." The elegance of utterance was infinitely done. But in the next instant the ordinary vulgarity of enunciation was in full play again. "Oh, gee!" she cried gayly. "He says Inspector Burke's got a gold watch that weighs a ton, an' all set with diamonds, which was give to 'im by admiral's friends! We didn't contribute."

"Given to him," Mary corrected, with a tolerant smile.

"What difference does it make?" Aggie demanded scornfully. "He's got it, ain't he? Just as soon as I get time I'm goin' after that watch—be lieve me!"

"No, you are not. You are under my orders now. And as long as you are working with us you will break no laws."

"But I can't see"—Aggie began to argue with the petulance of a spoiled child.

"When you were working alone did you have a home like this?"

"No."

"Or such clothes? Most of all, did you have safety from the police?"

"No; but, just the same, I can't see."

"Agnes, the richest men in this country have made their fortunes, not because of the law, but in spite of the law. They made up their minds what they wanted to do and then they engaged lawyers clever enough to show them how they could do it and still keep within the law. Any one with brains can get rich in this country if he will engage the right lawyer. Well, I have the brains, and Harris is showing me the law—the wonderful twist of law that was made for the rich. Since we keep inside the law we are safe."

"And now I must be off to a most important engagement with Mr. Dick Gilder."

CHAPTER VI.
A Tip From Headquarters.

AGGIE gave herself over to more cigarettes in an easy chair sprawled out in an attitude of comfort never taught in any finishing school for young ladies. Soon the coming of Joe Garson, who was some embarrassment; "her and young Gilder."

"Well?" came the crisp question. "Well, somehow," Garson went on still somewhat confusedly. "I can't see any good of it for her."

"Why?" Aggie demanded, in surprise.

"Old man Gilder's got a big pull, and if he caught on to his boy's going with Mary he'd be likely to send the police after us—strong! Believe me, I ain't looking for any trip up the river."

"We ain't done nothin' they can touch us for. Mary says so."

"Whether we've done anything or whether we haven't don't matter," he objected. "Once the police set out after you they'll get you. Russia ain't in it with some of the things I have seen pulled off in this town."

"Oh, can that 'traid talk' Aggie exclaimed roughly. "I tell you they can't get us. We've got our fingers crossed."

A noise at the hall door interrupted her, and she looked up to see a man, while behind him appeared the maid, protesting angrily.

"Never mind that announcing thing with me," the newcomer rasped to the expositing servant in a voice that suited well his thick set figure, with the bullet shaped head and the bull-like neck. He was Cassidy, who had had Mary Turner in his charge on the occasion of her ill fated visit to Edward Gilder's office four years before.

"Hello, Joe!" he cried familiarly. "Hello, Aggie!"

"Well?" Joe demanded.

"Just a little friendly call," Cassidy announced in his strident voice. "Where's the lady of the house?"

"Out," Aggie spoke very sharply. "Well, Joe," Cassidy went on, "when she comes back just tell her it's up to her to make a getaway and to make it quick."

"Say," Aggie retorted viciously, "you can't throw any scare into us. We ain't got anything on us. See?"

"Nothing on you, eh? Well, well, let's see," Cassidy regarded Garson with a grin. "You are Joe Garson, forger?"

As he spoke the detective took a notebook from a pocket, found a page, and then read: "First arrested in 1891 for forging the name of Edwin Goodsell to a check for $10,000. Again arrested June 19, 1893, for forgery. Arrested in April, 1898, for forging the signature of Oscar Hennemanway to a series of bonds that were counterfeit. Arrested as the man back of the Kelly gang in 1903. Arrested in 1906 for forgery."

"Haven't any records of convictions have you?"

"No, but we've got the right dose on you, all right, Joe Garson." He turned savagely on the girl.

"And you're little Aggie Lynch," Cassidy declared as he thrust the note book back into his pocket. "Just now you're posing as Mary Turner's cousin. You served two years in Burnside for blackmail. You were arrested in Buffalo, convicted and served your stretch. Nothing on you? Well, well!"

Again there was triumph in the officer's chuckle. He went on speaking with obvious enjoyment of the extent to which his knowledge reached.

"And the head of the gang is Mary Turner. Arrested four years ago for robbing the Emporium. Did her stretch of three years."

"Is that all you've got about her?" Garson demanded.

"That's all you've got about her?" Garson demanded.

"That's all you've got about her?" Garson demanded.

"That's all you've got about her?" Garson demanded.

because a young lady of independent fortune, who had living with her a cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch. The flat was abandoned. In its stead was an apartment in the Nineties on Riverside Drive, in which the ladies lived alone with two maids to serve them.

Garson had rooms in the neighborhood, but Jim Lynch, who persistently refused the conditions of such an alliance, betook himself afar to continue his reckless gathering of other folk's money in such wise as to make him amenable to the law the very first time he should be caught at it.

A few tentative ventures resulted in profits so large that the company grew mightily enthusiastic over the novel manner of working. In each instance Harris was consulted and made his confidential statement as to the legality of the thing proposed. After a few perfectly legal breach of promise suits, due to Aggie's winsome innocence of demeanor, had been settled advantageously out of court Mary devised a scheme of greater elaborateness, with the legal acumen of the lawyer to indorse it in the matter of safety. It was planned as the swindling of a swindler, which, in fact, had now become the secret principle in Mary's morality.

A gentleman possessed of some means, none too scrupulous himself, but with high financial aspirations, advertised for a partner to invest capital in a business sure to bring large returns. This advertisement caught the eye of Mary Turner, and she answered it.

An introductory correspondence encouraged her to hope for the victory in a game of cunning against cunning. She consulted with Harris and especially sought from him detailed information as to partnership law. His statements gave her such confidence that presently she entered into a partnership with the advertiser. By the terms of their agreement each deposited $30,000 to the partnership account.

This sum of $60,000 was ostensibly to be devoted to the purchase of a tract of land, which should afterward be divided into lots and resold to the public at enormous profit.

As a matter of fact, the advertiser planned to make a spurious purchase of the tract in question by means of forged deeds granted by an accomplice, thus making through fraud a nest profit of $30,000.

No sooner was the $60,000 on deposit in the bank than Mary Turner drew out the whole amount, as she had a perfect right to do legally.

When the advertiser learned of this he was, naturally enough, full of overflying wrath. But after an interview with Harris he swallowed his wrath as best he might.

He found he could not go to court with clean hands, which is a prime stipulation of the law, though often honored in the breach. So he let himself be mulcted in raging silence.

The event established Mary as the arbiter in her own coterie. She next decided that a certain General Hastings would make an excellent sacrifice on the altar of justice—and to her own financial profit.

The old man was a notorious rascal, of most unsavory reputation as a destroyer of innocence. It was probable that he would easily fall a victim to the ingenious charms of Aggie.

As for that precocious damsel, she would run no least risk of destruction by the satyr.

General Hastings met Aggie in the most casual way. He was captivated by her freshness and beauty, her demureness, her ignorance of all things vicious.

Straightway he set snares. He showered every gallant attention on the naive, bread and butter miss and succeeded gratifyingly soon in winning her heart—to all appearance.

But he gained nothing more, for the coy creature abruptly developed most effective powers of resistance to every blandishment that went beyond strict propriety.

His ardor cooled suddenly when Harris served a summons in a suit for $10,000 damages for breach of promise.

Even while this affair was still in the course of execution Mary found herself engaged in a direction that offered at least the hope of attaining her great desire—revenge against Edward Gilder.

This opportunity came in the person of his son, Dick. After much contriving, she got an introduction to that young man.

Forthwith she showed herself so deliciously womanly, so singularly beautiful that the young man was enraptured almost at once.

The fact thrilled Mary to the depths of her heart for in this son of the man whom she hated she saw the instrument of vengeance for which she had so longed.

Yet this one thing was so vital to her that she said nothing of her purposes, not even to Aggie, though that observant person may have possessed suspicious more or less near the truth.

WILSON IS CALM OVER SITUATION

No Crisis Calling For Closing
of Embassy in Mexico.

MEADWAY MUST BE SLOW.

Changes of Situation at Mexican Capital Have Not Impaired President's Confidence In Solution of Problem by Peaceful Means—Huerta to Carry Out Plans—Big Rush to Vera Cruz.

Washington, Nov. 18.—President Wilson does not regard the Mexican situation as having reached any such critical stage as to require the closing of the American embassy. Discussing reports to that effect, he said that Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American charge d'affaires, neither had been given his passports nor been told to come back. While details as to persons had been changed the main circumstances remained substantially the same as when the president previously expressed a favorable view of the situation.

Summing up the status of affairs, the president indicated that while the personal attitude of General Huerta might have changed, the circumstances upon which the American government bases its conviction that Huerta's elimination is inevitable have not changed at all. "The mills of the gods grind slowly" expresses the slow and steady purposes being pursued.

It was made plain at the White House that the enforced resignation of Minister Aldape did not affect materially the American plan, as it was pointed out that no scheme that this government might have could very well depend on the permanency of any member of the Huerta cabinet. The president made it plain that the changes in the situation, though they appeared kaleidoscopic in detail, had not impaired confidence here in the ultimate solution of the problem by peaceful means.

No Offers of Mediation.

Official denial was made at the White House of a report that pan-American mediation was contemplated, and it was reiterated that no mediation of any kind had been offered to either faction. South American nations, it was stated, had been informed in the same way as European nations and have expressed in the main their desire to support the American policy. Brazil, in particular, is not having reorganized the Huerta government previously, is regarded especially friendly to the American policy.

Secretary Bryan has asked for an inquiry concerning the executions at Juarez, but thus far has been unable to reconcile conflicting reports.

SUNSET ROUTE STRIKE OVER.

Southern Pacific Yields to Demands of Men to Meet Committee.

Houston, Nov. 18.—The strike of operating employees of the Southern Pacific lines in Texas and Louisiana was ended when the railroad yielded to the demands of the men to meet a federated committee of the four unions in the controversy. The men were ordered to resume work immediately.

Announcement of the settlement was made by W. G. Van Vleck, general manager of the Sunset Central line here, and was confirmed by the federated committee of the strikers.

TELEGRAPHIC TICKS.

Customs receipts during August and September show an increase of $40,000 over the corresponding months of last year.

The board of health has closed churches, schools, libraries and motion picture shows in Merchantville, N. J., because of a diphtheria epidemic.

LARGE SAVING IN REPAVING

Borough Profits by Repaving of Bigler Avenue

$1335.25 UNDER LOW BID

With Material Enough Left to Complete Concrete Sidewalk Along Borough Property on the Avenue—Council Pleased With The Showing—Routine Business.

Roll call of the borough council Monday evening found the president absent and Fred Kerr was chosen to preside at the meeting. The clerk was also absent hunting and John M. Urey, Esq., borough solicitor, acted as clerk.

Routine business was transacted. The street commissioner was directed to do such work on sidewalks as might be necessary before winter sets in.

The ordinance granting permission to the Dimeling Light and Heat company to operate in the borough was repealed, the company having transferred its plant to the Penn Public Service company.

Bigler Avenue Paving. Street Commissioner Graham reported the completion of the Bigler avenue repaving. The total cost of this work, including the labor, material and engineer's services amounted to $3146.71. The lowest bid for this work was $5082. In this bid a pitch filling was provided for, but the council decided to let the brick remain rough, because of the fact that the steepness of the street would make the paving too smooth for horses if pitch were put on the brick. By taking this course the borough saved $600.

Saved $1335.25. The saving to the borough in doing this repaving itself was shown to be $1335.25. The borough bought all material and has on hand crushed stone and cement enough to complete the six foot concrete sidewalk along the borough's property on Bigler avenue. Members of council were very much pleased over the report, and the large saving on this job is likely to convince councilmen in the future that the borough can do its own paving at a saving that will be well worth considering.

Improving on Nature. Far be it from a mere parent to criticize nature, but had she in her beneficence seen fit to equip the small boy with boots, what a saving had been made in the matter of shoes!—Chicago News

The Alternative. A Frenchman applied to a local official for a passport to visit Klaterschen, in Switzerland. The functionary, who was not a fellow of any geographical society, studied in vain with the spelling of the place's name. Then, unwilling to confess his difficulty, he blandly asked, "Would you as not visit some other town?"

WITTPENN IS NAMED N. Y. NAVAL OFFICER

Wilson Selects Jerseyman For New York Office.

Washington, Nov. 18.—President Wilson nominated ex-Mayor H. Otto Wittpenn of Jersey City to be naval officer of customs for the port of New York. In sending the nomination to the senate the president departed from his usual custom and issued a statement explaining the appointment.

The office to which Mr. Wittpenn is appointed has heretofore been considered an exclusive bit of patronage for Brooklyn. In going to New Jersey for his candidate the president made the following explanation:

"The appointment of a resident of New Jersey to this position is made in recognition of that part of New Jersey which was included in the customs collection district of New York under the reorganization of the customs service which took effect on July 1, 1913, embracing the counties of Sussex, Passaic, Hudson, Bergen, Essex, Union, Middlesex and Monmouth, and it is entirely appropriate that New Jersey should be represented in one of the important administrative offices of the consolidated port."

Mr. Wittpenn called at the White House with Senator Hughes of New Jersey.

FRIENDS MEET AT GRAMPIAN

Interesting Sessions of the
Quarterly Meeting

DISCUSSIONS OF INTEREST

Address of Woman Suffrage by Miss Hall—Dr. Bacheller Talks of Peace and Other Matters—Religious Exercises—Friends Emphasize Their Desire for Peace.

The Society of Friends opened their quarterly meeting at Grampian with the First Day School association on Saturday, November 15, at 2 P. M. The exercises consisted of music, including a duet by Elbel and Vera Spencer; recitations by Corlies Rishel and Eva Thorp and an essay by Roy Caldwell.

The question, "The Importance of an Education in a Religious Life," was discussed by C. M. Davis, J. D. Wall, Arthur Dewees, C. A. Wood, and others. The thought was brought out that our every-day life should be a religious life, in fact that if we lead a truly religious life it should be a part of our every-day business life, and that education—that is, development—of the proper kind would help to make us able to live such a life.

Saturday Evening.

Saturday evening's meeting was held under the auspices of the Friends Philanthropic Labor union with George W. Underwood, chairman. The meeting was addressed by Miss Louise Hall, Harrisburg, representing the Woman's Suffrage association of Pennsylvania. Miss Hall illustrated her lecture with a map of the United States, showing the spread of equal suffrage from its beginning in Wyoming in 1869 to Illinois in 1913, showing how adjacent states, seeing its working, adopted it one after another until now millions of women, especially in the west, are placed on a voting equality with men.

Much satisfaction was expressed with the address, a good collection for the cause was secured and quite a number enrolled as favoring woman suffrage.

Sabbath Morning.

Sabbath morning's meeting for worship was largely attended, as usual, in spite of the rain and bad roads. The meeting was addressed by Daniel Bacheller, of Philadelphia, who spoke of better, easier living from the point of view of doing our daily duties and work as a service. That which is done as a task is drudgery; that which is done out of love of service, is a pleasure.

So the point of view with which we approach our labors has much to do with their ease or irksome performance, and in whatever we do we can feel that we are performing service; that we are assisting in God's work; we feel an inspiration that will make our life a truly religious life.

Ann Moore, a friend almost 80 years old, said she could willingly do any necessary service, no matter how menial, but she wouldn't want to clean spittoons. (Many friends oppose the use of tobacco.)

Sabbath Afternoon.

The afternoon meeting in the interest of Friends Philanthropic Labor union was addressed by Daniel Bacheller on "International Peace." He said that when two boys met, often had to try each other's strength to see which one could overcome the other in wrestling or even fighting, which was perfectly right and proper and in the line of development of their powers as children. They should outgrow that, but it should not be allowed to become a habit, lasting on into manhood.

In the community under our present civilization we have learned to settle our disputes in an orderly manner and without fighting, but nations try to settle their disputes after the manner pursued by man hundreds or thousands of years ago—by bloodshed.

The early history of Christianity was detailed, the persecution of the early Christians by the Romans, which served only to increase their numbers and make them the more faithful to the teachings of Christ. The speaker said there were many signs to show that we are coming back to the law of love.

Friends for Peace.

The Friends have always held to the practice of peace and good will and the settlement of disputes by arbitration or mutual concessions, and other religious bodies are, for one reason or another, coming to stand on the same ground. The workingmen and farmers being the greatest sufferers (next to mothers) are coming to oppose war.

E. M. Davis and others gave examples of the power of nonresistance and expressions of good will overcoming evil with good.

The Business Meeting.

The business meeting Monday morning was preceded by a half hour of discussion of "The Larger Vision" as introduced by Arthur M. Dewees, of Baltimore, general secretary of the committee for advancing Friends principles, who, taking as his text a quotation from the autobiography of a noted woman worker said that the inspiration caused, perhaps, by our suddenly becoming capable of appreciating some new beauty or wonder of nature or art made us capable of other enlarged visions and tended to broaden our views of life and its work and duties.

The reading of queries in regard to the attitude of each toward the other and society in general elicited much thought and valuable discussion as did also the changes in discipline as reported as having been made by the late yearly meeting held at Baltimore.

Reports Received.

Reports were received from the four monthly meetings constituting this quarterly meeting, and delegates were present from meetings in Center and Bedford counties.

At the close of the meeting the general feeling was that a very pleasant and profitable series of meetings had been held, and much encouragement could be felt for the progress humanity is making toward better, saner, more civilized and enlightened ways of living.

Expects No Difficulty in Organizing New Congress.

Mexico City, Nov. 18.—General Huerta regards his part in the recent change of communications with the United States as finished. He expects to find no difficulty in consummating his plan to bring his new congress to full organization, and he continues making plans for military campaigns and for carrying out his policies of pacification.

What further move may be taken at Washington is a question which neither the Mexicans nor the foreigners here find an easy one to answer, but there was noticeable an increasing expression of opinion that the United States would continue the hands off policy. This was not a predominating belief, but those who expressed it pointed out that there was an element at Washington which would be content to see the federal and Constitutionalists play their own game to the finish, the taking of Juarez by the Constitutionalists being cited as perhaps an encouragement of such a disposition at Washington.

It was reported unofficially that the city of Chihuahua had been captured. The war department, however, has little information regarding the military operations, especially those in the north, in which the rebels are said to be victorious.

The situation about Tuxpan, the center of the oil industry, is critical.

ARRESTED AT WHITE HOUSE.

Man Found in Shrubbery Will Be Examined in Asylum Hospital.

Washington, Nov. 18.—A man who gave his name as Clyde Wyther was found in the shrubbery south of the White House and was arrested by the police.

He could give no explanation for his presence so close to the executive mansion and was imprisoned. He will be remanded to the asylum hospital for examination as to his sanity.

PENROSEISM THE LEADING ISSUE

Should Not be Returned to
United State Senate

PROGRESSIVES WILL FIGHT

Party of the People Will Put Forth Every Effort to Defeat the So-called Gifford Pinchot Delivers a Ringing Speech at Progressive Gathering at Scranton.

Scranton, Nov. 16. Progressives of thirteen northeastern counties, who met here today at a dinner given at the house warming of the Scranton Daily News, the new Progressive paper, formed a league, one of the main objects of which is to fight Penrose and Penroseism to a finish.

Fifty-six Progressives of state and national prominence attended the dinner also including Gifford Pinchot; William Wilhelm, of Pottsville, president of the State Progressive league; A. Nevil Delrich, of Chambersburg, chairman of the Washington party state committee, and Congressman A. F. Rupley, of Carlisle.

Progressives Steady as Veterans. In his speech Mr. Pinchot said: "A veteran regiment is best for one reason above all others—because it is steady. The veteran regiment was because you cannot scare it, you cannot fool it, you cannot stampede it, and you cannot make it quit. Those are the reasons why the Progressive movement is so formidable in American politics today. Not all of us have been in politics for a long time, but confidence in our cause, and the certainty of victory for our principles, has given our forces the steadiness, the persistence and the power of veterans."

Progressives Gain.

"We showed this steadiness at the Chicago Republican convention. We showed it when we came back to the Chicago Progressive convention; we showed it during the presidential election, and most of all, after it; and we have shown it again this year."

"In the elections this fall, Massachusetts was the one state where the lines were sharply drawn between Progressives, Democrats and Republicans. And in that state the vote for governor showed that the Progressives gained 3 per cent. over the vote in 1912, the Republicans lost 19 per cent and the Democrats lost 6 per cent."

Represents Magnate Rule.

"Why is the first great task before us in Pennsylvania to drive Penrose out of the seat in the United States senate which he disgraces and to relieve the seat of the blight upon its honor which he represents? Not because Penrose himself matters one way or the other. Standing alone, he would never have got where he is. But Penrose is important because he stands for an end and is supported by the magnates, who exercise through him the control over the state of Pennsylvania which has made them and keeps them over-rich."

Wipe Him Out.

"Penrose is the outward and visible sign in Pennsylvania of the magnate blight from which the whole nation is suffering. We must wipe him out and we shall wipe him out; but if after a time we allow another like him to take his place, little will have been gained."

"This is not a case of halfway measures. We have set out to make this state and nation, in fact as well as in theory, a land where every man has an equal chance. The magnate system must go. Our task will never be done until we have driven not only Penrose, but the exploiters behind him out of power for good and all."

Waifs Who Became Famous.

The list of waifs who have become famous is a long one. It includes Sir Henry Stanley, Queen Catherine the Good, Alexander Hamilton, Rosa Bonheur, Edgar Allan Poe, Rachel, Leonardo da Vinci and dates back as far as Moses. All these were homeless children—children who if left to their fate would undoubtedly have drifted into evil ways. Instead they have lived to add glory to their names and have contributed to the knowledge of the world at large through the fruits of their genius.

SADDENED BY SLUMS, GIRL TRIES TO DIE

Conditions Among Poor of New York Caused Despondency.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 18.—We hope was held here by the physicians of the Homeopathic hospital for saving the life of Miss Virginia Sterling, twenty-five years old, who came here from New York, but who is believed to be a member of a wealthy Virginia family. The girl took bichloride of mercury tablets. Melancholia brought on by the misery and suffering she witnessed while working in the slums of New York and in the charity hospitals is believed to have been the reason for taking the poison.

The young woman will say very little about herself further than that she lived for a time in both the Manhattan and the Victoria hotels in Manhattan. Before the young woman lost consciousness she said that she had nothing to live for and begged the physicians at the hospital to do nothing to try to prolong her life. She has refused to tell the address of any of her relatives either in New York or Virginia. When found unconscious in Main street in this city she was garbed in an expensive suit of wine colored broadcloth trimmed with fur. On her hands were two solitary diamond rings, as well as a wedding ring.

Handel's Big Earnings.

Handel made more money from his works than any composer before his time. For a "Te Deum" and a "Jubilate," written to celebrate the treaty of Utrecht, he was awarded a pension of £200 a year. This was doubled by George I. soon after his accession and confirmed by George II., so that Handel drew the pension until his death in 1759. Altogether for these two compositions Handel received £18,000. Although he lost thousands of pounds running opera at Covent Garden, Handel died worth £20,000—a sum, allowing for the difference in the value of money, equal to $50,000 nowadays.—London Mail.

Good evening! It's easy for you to forget that behind the clouds the sun still shines, isn't it?

PENROSEISM MUST GO

The Progressive party of Pennsylvania—known in this state as the Washington party—has made Penroseism the chief issue for the campaign this year. This is an issue upon which every honest, right-minded voter can unite. The Washington party has already made serious breaches in the walls which surround Penroseism having last year sent the senators party down to third place in the column of political organizations in Pennsylvania.

Penrose stands for all that is crooked in politics. He is a boss who has surrounded himself with kitchen aids who are ready to do his bidding and his leadership has always been antagonistic to the welfare of the people of the state. He has used the Republican organization for the advancement of his own political interests, despite the fact that a majority of the voters of that party recognize him as a selfish boss.

The Washington party hopes that long before the election of a successor to Senator Penrose the rank and file of the Republican party will have been convinced that it is their duty as good citizens to defeat Penrose and end his bossism. The organization of a league by representatives of the Washington party in thirteen districts of the northeastern part of the state last Saturday demonstrates the fact that the statements of the Penrose gang that the Washington party is going to pieces is false.

Encouraged by the action of the Washingtons at Scranton those members of the party who may have been misled by false rumors will renew their allegiance to the people's party and many thousands of Republican voters will be persuaded to unite with the Washingtons in getting rid of a boss who has too long ruled the political situation in Pennsylvania.
Leagues similar to that organized at Scranton Saturday will be formed in every county in the state and the fight against Penroseism and the political evils that he stands for will be waged vigorously.

In Clearfield there are signs that the Washington party intends to be in the thick of the fight. The earnest men who are at the head of the party in this county are determined that they will do all in their power to aid in removing the stain of Penroseism from the state. Republicans who have heretofore considered it their duty to vote their party ticket because it was a Republican ticket are turning away from that party, not because they do not believe in its principles but because they see that Penrose and his henchmen have no intention to be faithful to those principles. The Republicans who know Penrose as he is are deserting the clique of political crooks who have so long used the voters of the party to compass their own personal and political ends.

SMALLPOX EPIDEMICS

Smallpox exists in Lock Haven Mill Hill, Tyrone and Altoona in some of these places reaching the stage of an epidemic. All of these towns are within one hundred miles of Clearfield. It is a miracle if the disease is not carried into Clearfield.
The present weather is very favorable to the spread of the disease.

Despite the assertions of a certain class of citizens there is only one known preventive of smallpox. Those persons who have been vaccinated, we are told by physicians and have actual personal knowledge are immune from being attacked by the disease. The anti-vaccinists while denouncing vaccination, have not been able to suggest any other method of preventing attacks by smallpox. Under these circumstances it will be the part of wisdom for parents whose children have not yet been vaccinated to have that precaution taken at an early date.

Earle C. Boose, Esq., spent only sixty-one dollars in his campaign for district attorney. Mr. Boose cannot be accused of tossing the boodle around promiscuously, at any rate. And he made a mighty good run, too.

If a stranger asks you to buy a "School Progress League" button, don't. The sellers of these buttons are alleged to be swindlers who have been run out of Altoona.

Saloonkeepers in Pottsville are fighting a commission form of government for that city because under that form saloon licenses would be higher priced. Another instance in which the saloon seeks to deprive the people of good government in order that the liquor interests may reap a richer harvest.

Every honest Republican can join the movement to prevent the reelection of Senator Penrose, the accredited agent of the selfish interests.

STRIKE TODAY.

Rise for the day is passing.
And you lie dreaming on.
The others have buckled their armor.
And forth to the fight are gone.
A place in the ranks awaits you.
Each man has some part to play.
The Past in the Future lies nothing in the face of stern today.

Rise from your dreams of the Future,
Of gaining some hard fought field,
Of storming some dry fortress
Or bidding some giant yield.
Your Future has deeds of glory
Of honor and grand it may.
But your arm will never be stronger
Or the need so great as today.

Rise! If the Past detains you
Her sunshine and storms forget,
No chains so unworthy to hold you
As those of a vain regret.
Sad or bright she is lifeless ever.
Cast her phantom arms away,
Nor look back save to learn the lesson
Of a nobler strike today.

Rise for the day is passing.
The sound that you scarcely hear
Is the enemy marching to battle—
Arise for the foe is here.
Stay not to sharpen our weapons.
Or the hour will strike at last.
When from the East a coming battle
You may want to find it past.

FOWLER REFUSES TO AID INQUIRY

Lawyer Held For Trial In Jail of $5,000.

ENTERS PLEA OF NOT GUILTY

Reserves Right to Change Plea in Ten Days—Refuses Offer of Immunity in Exchange For Complete Revelation of Conditions—Ex-Governor Sulzer to
Be a Witness.

New York Nov. 18.—Electing to make no bargain with the district attorney by telling any details of the alleged extortion of so-called campaign contributions from state highway contractors, Everett P. Fowler a Kingston lawyer submitted to arrest in the Criminal Courts building was arraigned before Judge Crane in the court of general sessions and pleaded not guilty to the indictment charging extortion. His counsel Martin W. Littleton, in making the plea added the usual stipulation to be allowed to change the plea within the regular time.

Bail fixed at $5,000, was immediately furnished by the United States Fidelity and Guarantee company whose state agent was George H. Mc-Guire, the witness who testified the bonding company did 90 per cent of the bonding for the contractors on state work. Adjournment was taken for ten days.

Neither Fowler nor his counsel would say anything but it was evident from their attitude that the indicted lawyer had decided not to accept the alternative of submitting his case to District Attorney Whitman and depending on the latter for clemency. Mr. Littleton conferred with the district attorney before appearing in court and introduced Fowler to the prosecutor while waiting for the elevator.

Sulzer to Testify

Mr. Whitman has decided to call Wm.
Ham Sulzer as a witness in the John Doe inquiry into the shakedown of contractors on the state roads and large canal to campaign contributions. Mr. Whitman will seek from Mr. Sulzer information about a meeting in Syracuse in which it is alleged a scheme was offered for dividing the state into six zones that funds could be obtained conditionally from contractors and others. Mr. Whitman said to the effect of an order to the witness.

It is reported that the scheme is unlimited provided for the appointment of a high in each district and that he would go forth with the modest instruction that the contractor who was posed to give him the money should be given a check for the amount.
Fowler and George H. McGuire both of whom have been witnesses in the inquiry, were held by the
P. B. Co. and taken to the Criminal Courts building.

P. E. KATSURA.
Brain Japanese
Scientist Weighed
More Than Average.

The brain of the late Prince Katsura, one of Japan's greatest statesmen, who died on Oct. 10 weighed slightly more than 1600 grams. Prince Katsura was president of the Japanese society devoted to the study of cancer from which disease he died and in accordance with his will directed his body was offered to science and dissected. This brain weighed 1640 grams, or nearly the same as that of Ivan the philosopher and heavier than that of Napoleon III or that of Gambetta. It was a little lighter than that of Bismarck and about 30 grams more than the brain of an average person. The metric 1000 grams is about 2.2 ounces, which is nearly one and one-half ounces more than the weight of the brain of the average man.

NEW YORK STOCKS.

Tone of Market Largely Influenced by Conditions in London.

New York, Nov. 17.—The market tone and course of prices were again determined by London, the declines on the other side before our opening being followed by recessions here extending from substantial fractions to over one point. The change in the character in the news in relation to Mexican affairs was the sole incentive for the lower range both here and in London, and little interest was attached in speculative circles to any other factor. After the first sales a steeper tone developed, however, and some slight rallies were recorded in the important issues.

Although dealings all through the first hour were small in volume and trading came at times to a standstill, a strong tone was shown after the early transactions, with almost complete recoveries of the initial losses. There was a scant supply after the first few minutes, which was shown by the manner in which advances in Lehigh Valley and New Haven occurred both of these issues moving up one-half point between sales. New Haven which opened at 7 1/2 rose to 7 7/8 in the first half of the forenoon, and the new debentures when issued advanced eight-eighths point to 10 1/2. The lower London cables before our opening were not followed by any foreign trading. Central Leather was the most prominent of the specialties moving up three-fourths point to 25 1/2. Government bonds were unchanged and other bond-strong.

The general list showed a steady tone
all through the forenoon, with the volume of business exceedingly small. Many of the less active issues however moved over a fairly wide range. The most important fluctuation was in American Real Estate stock, which sold down to 40 on a few sales against 40 on Saturday. There was a further fractional advance in Central Leather common, bringing the price to 26 a gain of one point so far for the day and of four points from the quotation prevailing a week ago.

We have laws for protecting the boy from the tobacco

A Mechanical Craving.
That mechanical craving which Macfarlane got over is a common one. My own father—with a twist toward homes—used to walk about with a bit of straw in his mouth. I have traveled across the Atlantic with a man who could not get along without a "cold cigar," and the one I met him from Liverpool to New York. And these notes are written by a smoker with a cold pipe in his mouth. I want a pipe, but the tobacco in it amounts to about a quarter of an ounce a week.—London Chronicle.

against the law that had outraged her, and this in safety since she would attempt to save that within the law.

CHAPTER V. Keeping Within the Law.

MARY'S heart leaped at the possibility back of those three words, "within the law." She might do anything, seek any revenge, work any evil, enjoy any mastery as long as she should keep within the law. There could be no punishment then. That was the lesson taught by the captain in high finance. He was at pains always in his stuporous robberies to keep within the law. To that end he employed lawyers of mighty cunning and learning to guide his steps aright in such tortuous paths.

There, then, was the secret. Why should she not use the like means? Why, indeed? She had brains enough to devise, surely. Beyond that she needed only to keep her course most carefully within those limits of wrongdoing permitted by the statutes. The sole requirement would be a lawyer equally unscrupulous and astute.

She took Joe Garson into her confidence. He was vastly astonished at the outset and not quite pleased. To his view this plan offered merely a fashion of setting difficulties in the way of achievement.

Presently, however, the sincerity and persistence of the girl won him over. The task of convincing him would have been easier had he himself ever known the torment of serving a term in prison. Thus far, however, the former had always escaped the penalty for his crimes, though often close to conviction. But Mary's arguments were of a compelling sort as she set them forth in detail, and Garson agreed that the experiment should be made.

An agreement was made by which Joe Garson and certain of his more trusted intimates in the underworld were to put themselves under the orders of Mary concerning the sphere of their activities. Furthermore, they bound themselves not to engage in any devious business without her consent. Aggie, too, was one of the company thus constituted, but she figured little in the preliminary discussions, since neither Mary nor the former had much respect for the intellectual capabilities of the adventures, though they appreciated to the full her remarkable powers of influencing men to her will.

It was not difficult to find a lawyer suited to the necessities of the undertaking. Mary selected Sigmund Harris, an attorney just in the prime of his mental vigor, who possessed a knowledge of the law only to be equaled by his disrespect for it.

Forthwith the scheme was set in operation. As a first step Mary Turner

hership with the advertiser. By the terms of their agreement each deposited $30,000 to the partnership account. This sum of $60,000 was ostensibly to be devoted to the purchase of a tract of land, which should afterward be divided into lots and resold to the public at enormous profit. As a matter of fact, the advertiser planned to make a spurious purchase of the tract in question by means of forged deeds granted by an accomplice, thus making through fraud a neat profit of $30,000.

No sooner was the $60,000 on deposit in the bank than Mary Turner drew out the whole amount, as she had a perfect right to do legally. When the advertiser learned of this he was, naturally enough, full of overflying wrath. But after an interview with Harris he swallowed his wrath as best he might. He found he could not go to court with clean hands, which is a prime stipulation of the law, though often honored in the breach. So he let himself be mulcted in raging silence.

The event established Mary as the arbiter in her own coterie. She next decided that a certain General Hastings would make an excellent sacrifice on the altar of justice—and to her own financial profit. The old man was a notorious rascal, of most unsavory reputation as a destroyer of innocence. It was probable that he would easily fall a victim to the ingenious charms of Aggie. As for that precocious damsel, she would run no least risk of destruction by the satyr.

General Hastings met Aggie in the most casual way. He was captivated by her freshness and beauty, her demureness, her ignorance of all things vicious. Straightway he set snares. He showered every gallant attention on the naive, bread and butter miss and succeeded gratifyingly soon in winning her heart—to all appearance. But he gained nothing more, for the coy creature abruptly developed most effective powers of resistance to every blandishment that went beyond strict propriety. His ardor cooled suddenly when Harris served a summons in a suit for $10,000 damages for breach of promise.

Even while this affair was still in the course of execution Mary found herself engaged in a direction that offered at least the hope of attaining her great desire—revenge against Edward Gilder. This opportunity came in the person of his son, Dick. After much contriving, she got an introduction to that young man. Forthwith she showed herself so deliciously womanly, so singularly beautiful that the young man was smitten almost at once. The fact thrilled Mary to the depths of her heart for in this son of the man whom she hated she saw the instrument of vengeance for which she had so longed. Yet this one thing was so vital to her that she said nothing of her purposes, not even to Aggie, though that observant person may have possessed suspicious more or less near the truth.

It was some such suspicion that lay behind her speech as, in negligence, she sat smoking a cigarette, while watching Mary, who was adjusting her hat before the mirror of her dressing table one pleasant spring morning.

"Hullo! up a whole lot, ain't you?" Aggie remarked affably, with that laxity of language which characterized her natural mood.

"I have a very important engagement with Dick Gilder," Mary replied tranquilly.

"Nice boy, ain't he?" Aggie ventured indistinctly.

"Oh, I suppose so," came the indifferent answer from Mary as she tilted the picture hat to an angle a trifle more jaunty.

"I don't get you, Mary. You never used to look at the men. The way you acted when you first run round with me, I thought you sure was a snuff-fragette. And then you met this young Gilder—and—good night, nurse!"

"Well?"

"His old man sends you up for a stretch for something you didn't do, and you take up with his son like!"

"And yet you don't understand!" There was scorn for such gross stupidity in the musical voice.

Aggie choked a little from the cigarette smoke as she gave a gasp when suspicion of the truth suddenly dawned on her slow intelligence.

"Hully gee!" Her voice came in a treble shriek of apprehension. "I'm wise!"

"But you must understand this," Mary went on with an authoritative note in her voice. "Whatever may be between young Gilder and me is to be strictly my own affair. It has absolutely nothing to do with the rest of you or with our schemes for money making. And, what is more, Agnes, I want to know what you meant by talking in the public street yesterday with a common pickpocket."

Aggie's childlike face changed swiftly to an expression of a sly eagerness to sullenness.

"You know perfectly well, Mary Turner," she cried indignantly, "that I only said a few words in passing to my brother Jim. And he ain't no common pickpocket. Hully gee! He's the best dip in the business."

"But you must not be seen speaking with him," Mary directed, with a certain air of command now become habitual to her among the members of her clique. "My cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch, must be very careful as to her associates."

"He just stopped me to say it's been the best year he ever had," she explained, with ostentatious vanity.

"How can that be when the dead line now is John street?"

"The dead line?" Aggie scoffed.

"Why, Jim takes lunch every day in the Wall street Delmonico's. And only yesterday he went down to police headquarters just for a little excitement, 'cause Jim does sure hate a dull life. Say, he told me they've got a mat at the door with 'Welcome' on it in letters three feet high. Now, what do you think of that? And, oh, yes!" she continued happily, "Jim, he lifted a leather from a bull who was standing in the hallway there at headquarters! Jim sure does love excitement."

Mary lifted her dark eyebrows in half amused inquiry.

"It's no use, Agnes," she declared, though without entire sincerity. "I can't quite keep up with your thieves' argot—your slang, you know. Just what did this brother of your do?"

"Why, he copped the copper's kaie," Aggie translated, glibly.

Mary threw out her hands in a gesture of dismay.

Thereupon the adventures instantly assumed a most ladylike and mining air which ill assorted with the cigarette that she held between her lips.

"He gently removed a leathern wallet," she said sedately, "containing a large sum of money from the coat pocket of a member of the detective force." The elegance of utterance was infinitely done. But in the next instant the ordinary vulgarity of enunciation was in full play again. "Oh, gee!" she cried gayly. "He says Inspector Burke's got a gold watch that weighs a ton, an' all set with diamonds, which was give to 'im by admiral's friends! We didn't contribute."

"Given to him," Mary corrected, with a tolerant smile.

"What difference does it make?" Aggie demanded scornfully. "He's got it, ain't he? Just as soon as I get time I'm goin' after that watch—be lieve me!"

"No, you are not. You are under my orders now. And as long as you are working with us you will break no laws."

"But I can't see"—Aggie began to argue with the petulance of a spoiled child.

"When you were working alone did you have a home like this?"

"No."

"No; but, just the same, I can't see."

"Agnes, the richest men in this country have made their fortunes, not because of the law, but in spite of the law. They made up their minds what they wanted to do and then they engaged lawyers clever enough to show them how they could do it and still keep within the law. Any one with brains can get rich in this country if he will engage the right lawyer. Well, I have the brains, and Harris is showing me the law—the wonderful twist of law that was made for the rich since we keep inside the law we are safe."

"And now I must be off to a most important engagement with Mr. Dick Gilder."

CHAPTER VI. A Tip From Headquarters.

AGGIE gave herself over to more cigarettes in an easy chair sprawled out in an attitude of comfort never taught in any finishing school for young ladies. Soon the coming of Joe Garson, who was usually in and out of the apartment a number of times daily, provided a welcome diversion. Aggie explained in response to his question that Mary had gone out to keep an engagement with Dick Gilder.

"Mary has been with him a good deal lately," he said, half questioningly.

"That's what," was the curt agreement.

"Think she's stuck on him?"

"Why not?" Aggie retorted. "Bet your life I'd be if I had a chance. He's a swell boy, and his father's got the coin too."

At this the man moved impatiently, and his eyes wandered to the window. Again Aggie studied him with a swift glance of interrogation.

"Joe, if there's anything on your mind about it."

"It's Mary," Garson explained, with some embarrassment; "her and young Gilder."

"Well?" came the crisp question.

"Well, somehow," Garson went on still somewhat confusedly, "I can't see any good of it for her."

"Why?" Aggie demanded, in surprise.

"Old man Gilder's got a big pull, and if he caught on to his boy's going with Mary he'd be likely to send the police after us—strong! Believe me, I ain't looking for any trip up the river."

"We ain't done nothin' they can touch us for. Mary says so."

"Whether we've done anything or whether we haven't don't matter," he objected. "Once the police set out after you they'll get you. Russia ain't in it with some of the things I have seen pulled off in this town."

"Oh, can that 'traid talk' Aggie exclaimed roughly. "I tell you they can't get us. We've got our fingers crossed."

A noise at the hall door interrupted her, and she looked up to see a man, while behind him appeared the maid, protesting angrily.

"Never mind that announcing thing with me," the newcomer rasped to the expositing servant in a voice that suited well his thick set figure, with the bullet shaped head and the bull-like neck. He was Cassidy, who had had Mary Turner in his charge on the occasion of her ill fated visit to Edward Gilder's office four years before.

"Hello, Joe!" he cried familiarly. "Hello, Aggie!"

"Well?" Joe demanded.

"Just a little friendly call," Cassidy announced in his strident voice.

"Where's the lady of the house?"

"Out," Aggie spoke very sharply. "Well, Joe," Cassidy went on, "when she comes back just tell her it's up to her to make a getaway and to make it quick."

"Say," Aggie retorted viciously, "you can't throw any scare into us. We ain't got anything on us. See?"

"Nothing on you, eh? Well, well, let's see," Cassidy regarded Garson with a grin. "You are Joe Garson, forger?"

As he spoke the detective took a notebook from a pocket, found a page, and then read: "First arrested in 1891 for forging the name of Edwin Goodsell to a check for $10,000. Again arrested June 19, 1893, for forgery. Arrested in April, 1898, for forging the signature of Oscar Hennemanway to a series of bonds that were counterfeit. Arrested as the man back of the Kelly gang in 1903. Arrested in 1906 for forgery."

"Haven't any records of convictions have you?"

"No, but we've got the right dose on you, all right, Joe Garson." He turned savagely on the girl.

"And you're little Aggie Lynch," Cassidy declared as he thrust the note back into his pocket. "Just now you're posing as Mary Turner's cousin. You served two years in Burnside for blackmail. You were arrested in Buffalo, convicted and served your stretch. Nothing on you? Well, well!"

Again there was triumph in the officer's chuckle. He went on speaking with obvious enjoyment of the extent to which his knowledge reached.

"And the head of the gang is Mary Turner. Arrested four years ago for robbing the Emporium. Did her stretch of three years."

"Is that all you've got about her?" Garson demanded.

"You're posing as Mary Turner's cousin. You served two years in Burnside for blackmail. You were arrested in Buffalo, convicted and served your stretch. Nothing on you? Well, well!"

Again there was triumph in the officer's chuckle. He went on speaking with obvious enjoyment of the extent to which his knowledge reached.

"And the head of the gang is Mary Turner. Arrested four years ago for robbing the Emporium. Did her stretch of three years."

"Is that all you've got about her?" Garson demanded with such abruptness that Cassidy forgot his dignity sufficiently to answer with an unqualified yes.

"Nothing in your record of her about her coming out without a friend to the world and trying to go straight? You ain't got nothing in that pretty little book of your'n about your going to the millinery store where she finally got a job and tipping them off to where she come from?"

"Sure they was tipped off. We got to protect the city."

"Got anything in that record of your'n?" Garson went on venomously, "about her getting another job and your following her up again and having her throw you out? Got it there about the letter you had old Gilder write, as that his influence would get her cased?"

"Oh, we had her right the first time. You did not. She was railroaded for a job she never done. She went in honest, and she came out honest."

"And that's why she's here now with a stack of crooks," Cassidy retorted.

Boredom of Perfection.

because a young lady of independent fortune, who had living with her a cousin, Miss Agnes Lynch. The flat was abandoned. In its stead was an apartment in the Nineties on Riverside drive, in which the ladies lived alone with two maids to serve them.

Garson had rooms in the neighborhood, but Jim Lynch, who persistently refused the conditions of such an alliance, betook himself afar to continue his reckless gathering of other folk's money in such wise as to make him amenable to the law the very first time he should be caught at it.

A few tentative ventures resulted in profits so large that the company grew mightily enthusiastic over the novel manner of working. In each instance Harris was consulted and made his confidential statement as to the legality of the thing proposed. After a few perfectly legal breach of promise suits, due to Aggie's winsome innocence of demeanor, had been settled advantageously out of court Mary devised a scheme of greater elaborateness, with the legal acumen of the lawyer to indorse it in the matter of safety. It was planned as the swindling of a swindler, which, in fact, had now become the secret principle in Mary's morality.

A gentleman possessed of some means, none too scrupulous himself, but with high financial aspirations, advertised for a partner to invest capital in a business sure to bring large returns. This advertisement caught the eye of Mary Turner, and she answered it.

An introductory correspondence encouraged her to hope for the victory in a game of cunning against cunning. She consulted with Harris and especially sought from him detailed information as to partnership law. His statements gave her such confidence that presently she entered into a partnership with the advertiser. By the terms of their agreement each deposited $30,000 to the partnership account. This sum of $60,000 was ostensibly to be devoted to the purchase of a tract of land, which should afterward be divided into lots and resold to the public at enormous profit. WILSON IS CALM OVER SITUATION

of Embassy in Mexico.

MEADWAY MUST BE SLOW.

Changes of Situation at Mexican Capital Have Not Impaired President's Confidence In Solution of Problem by Peaceful Means—Huerta to Carry Out Plans—Big Rush to Vera Cruz.

Washington, Nov. 18. — President Wilson does not regard the Mexican situation as having reached any such critical stage as to require the closing of the American embassy. Discussing reports to that effect, he said that Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American charge d'affaires, neither had been given his passports nor been told to come back. While details as to persons had been changed the main circumstances remained substantially the same as when the president previously expressed a favorable view of the situation.

Summing up the status of affairs, the president indicated that while the personal attitude of General Huerta might have changed, the circumstances upon which the American government bases its conviction that Huerta's elimination is inevitable have not changed at all. "The mills of the gods grind slowly" expresses the slow and steady purposes being pursued.

It was made plain at the White House that the enforced resignation of Minister Aldape did not affect materially the American plan, as it was pointed out that no scheme that this government might have could very well depend on the permanency of any member of the Huerta cabinet. The president made it plain that the changes in the situation, though they appeared kaleidoscopic in detail, had not impaired confidence here in the ultimate solution of the problem by peaceful means.

No Offers of Mediation.

Official denial was made at the White House of a report that pan-American mediation was contemplated, and it was reiterated that no mediation of any kind had been offered to either faction. South American nations, it was stated, had been informed in the same way as European nations and have expressed in the main their desire to support the American policy. Brazil, in particular, is not having reorganized the Huerta government previously, is regarded especially friendly to the American policy.

Secretary Bryan has asked for an inquiry concerning the executions at Juarez, but thus far has been unable to reconcile conflicting reports.

SHIPS GUARDING MEXICO.

SUNSET ROUTE STRIKE OVER.

Southern Pacific Yields to Demands of Men to Meet Committee.

Houston, Nov. 18. — The strike of operating employees of the Southern Pacific lines in Texas and Louisiana was ended when the railroad yielded to the demands of the men to meet a federated committee of the four unions in the controversy. The men were ordered to resume work immediately.

Announcement of the settlement was made by W. G. Van Vleck, general manager of the Sunset Central line here, and was confirmed by the federated committee of the strikers.
